

Spring Break Hotels

Cut Loose in Beantown at Copley Square for Spring Break

Where: 47 Huntington Avenue [map], Boston, MA, United States, 02116

March 4, 2009 at 10:58 AM

With Maury down in Miami, the frat-tastic bros likely taking over the desired Mexico spots, and New York City being kinda meh during March, why don't you try something new and kick it in Boston this Spring Break? It doesn't exactly conjure up the same sorts of images of sandy bottoms, bikinis and Coronas that most of us think of for March-April trips, but hey: it's cheap, Boston's got plenty of good beer, and there are more than enough college kids to show you a good time around Beantown.

Last year, the historic Copley Square Hotel underwent a 17 million dollar renovation and when it (finally) re-opened, it had reinvented itself to be a boutique-y chic property marketed to the hip young things. Inside, you've got nightlife options like Saint (a dress-code-enforced kinda joint), the more laid-back Minibar and the Lobby Lounge — and the neighborhood's got no shortage of nighttime party options (or daytime shopping options, really) either.

This season, the hotel is offering a Spring Break package that includes a King Deluxe room, breakfast for 2 at Xhale, 2 cocktails and an appetizer at Minibar, VIP access to Saint, and 2 passes to FitCorp "to work off your hangover." The package rates start at $259 for the first night (that's 130 per person if you split it with your BFF), and then each additional night will be 20% off the best available rate; the package is available from March 1 to April 16, 2009.